Illustration competition 2015

Valeria

Primary Edition

We hope you're all busy writing your entries for our creative writing competition. You now have an exciting opportunity to bring your 'somewhere unforgettable' to life by creating an illustration for the creative writing book.

Your picture can illustrate the place you described in your creative writing piece or can be of somewhere completely different. You don't have to have written a story to enter. Download the template from the Global Classroom and submit your entry by Thursday 16 April 2015.

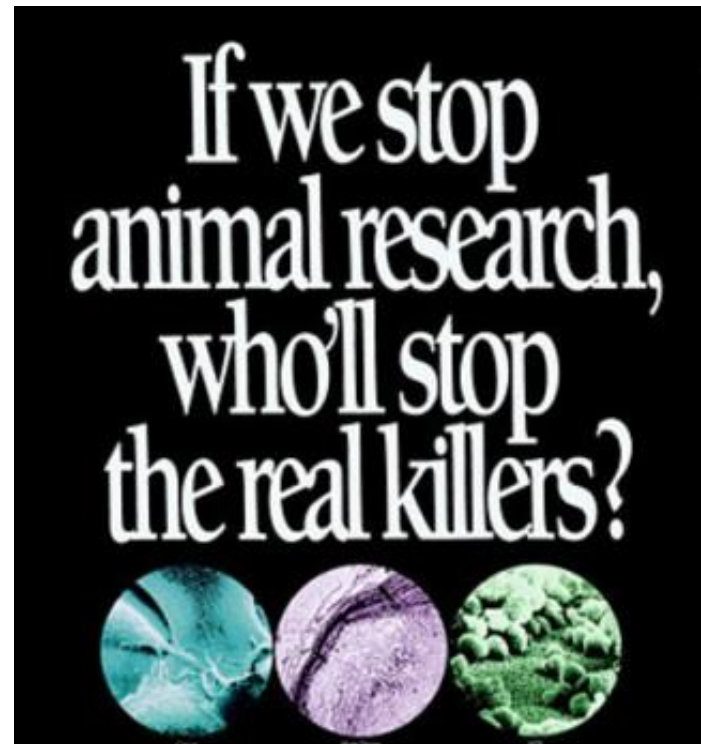

Competition winners will have their illustrations published in the creative writing book.

Renowned violinist berates coughing child

Renowned violinist Kyung-Wha Chung has shocked audiences at the Royal Festival Hall by publicly berating the parents of a coughing child.

The South Korean prodigy had been absent from the London stage for 12 years, partly due to a finger injury.

But the 66-year-old took offence at a child coughing during her performance of Mozart's Sonata In G.

"Maybe bring her back when she's older," she scolded the parents from the stage.

Anna Picard, music critic for The Times, said the atmosphere in the hall had already been tense, such was the anticipation surrounding the violinist's comeback.

"With one shrivelling put-down, a tetchy atmosphere turned toxic," she wrote in her review.

The violinist had not played in the UK for more than a decade
